At The Colorado Health Foundation, we are committed to listening to Coloradans across the state to understand what issues affect their health, and Pulse, our annual poll, helps us do just that. One of the things we consistently hear: significant numbers of Coloradans are struggling with mental and emotional challenges.

In 2021, Pulse found that 55% of Coloradans are experiencing anxiety. We know there are a number of factors in life that can impact our mental health – the high cost of housing, hard-to-find childcare and unfair treatment can all negatively affect our emotional well-being.
